The beasts, that have their sight directly fixed touse of wards heaven: I finde the Camels and the irtificial Estridges necke much more raised and upright, than ours. What beasts have not their face aloft and before, and looke not directly opposite, as we; and in their naturali posture descrie not as much of heaven and earth, as man doth? And what qualities of our corporall constitution, both in Plato and Cicero cannot fit and serve a thousand beasts i Such as most resemble man are the vilest and filthiest of all the rout: As for outward apparance and true shape of the visage, it is the Munkie or Ape: Simia quam simiis, turpistima bestia, nobis! --Cic. Nat. Deo. i. Enni. An Ape, a most il-favored beast, How like to us in all the rest? as for inward and vitall parts, it is...
